This unfortunate pandemic has caused major changes to our world today. We are not the people we were five months ago and we will not be the same people in five months. Many lives have been lost and many are still suffering from this Corona outbreak. Personally, I went through many stages myself during isolation. Some points in time I was happy as ever while other days made me feel alone and in the shadows. I knew no matter what happened each day that we will all get through this difficult time and we will see our family and friends again, it will take time, but we will.

I learnt a lot about myself and my surroundings. I learnt not to take anything for granted and to appreciate my family, friends and freedom. I also learnt who I could rely and who cared about me, my friends who checked up on me and my family who were there with me all the time for 3 months. I've noticed who my real friends are and who treats me with the respect we all deserve. I've always put others before my happiness nevertheless, I'm going to put myself first and my family as they mean the most to me and are always there no matter what.

I feel that sometimes in society we get carried away and we go into bubbles with what and who we are. This pandemic was a real eyeopener for many people and I hope that people realise this. Communicating with my family and friends was a must in order for me to obtain happiness. Our world has never seen anything like this before and we have to stay united to work through this, we will, it will just take some time but we've got all the time in the world. Everything has changed and so have I.
